Monticello was the realization of a dream of long standing, and to its years. On the left is the main doorway with a two-faced clock above it, indicator connected with the weather vane on the roof, which enabled Jefferson
Monticello was the realization of a dream of long standing, and in its design and the arrangement of its gardens, the country seat of many years. On the left is the main doorway with a two-faced clock above it. On the other dial, the weather vane is on the roof, which enabled Jefferson to note the direction of the wind without leaving the building. At the

JEFFERSON WISHED HIS HOME TO BE THE MOST BEAUTIFUL IN AMERICA. By Jacob Cayer and Edwin L. Wickert.